RENEWED

Presented by [unreadable]

Bus stop 2: Kuyaphuthuma

We face difficult times ahead, especially if political parties cannot succeed in working together in coalitions. One of the other findings of the Afrobarometer survey was that two-thirds of South Africans would be willing to sacrifice regular elections if a non-elected government or leader could impose law and order, and deliver houses and jobs. The message is clear: if coalition politics do not improve people's lives, then there is a real danger that South Africans will turn away from democracy to authoritarian rule.

Bus stop 4: Imvuselelo

The urgency of renewing left forces - buttressed by the social demands of workers, lower-middle classes, the unemployed, rural masses, township communities, youth and women - who make up the majority - is necessitated by the worsening crisis of liberal democracy in both the global North and South. In the absence of a formidable Left, far-right forces, neo-fascists or authoritarian neoliberal rulers tend to take the centre stage.

"With new dawn's energy
I found strength in the silence
For I have seen countless struggles
And build bridges of Liberty's path
But when I rise, will I charge
Missing from the past, please
Which hand I have to hold?"
